Our Chute eighth grade basketball team this year was a very talented group. They tied for the championship in league play. We all are anticipating seeing them play when they continue in high school.

EIGHTH GRADE

TRACK TEAM

Success is ours! 7th and 8th grade girls gymnastics teams were District 65 champions.

Hard work during many early morning practice sessions allowed the 8th grade boys to win the District 65 gymnastics championship and the 7th grade boys to place second.

INDUSTRIAL ARTS EXCHANGE

For the first time in the history of Chute Junior High School, the boys have put on aprons, and the girls have learned to hammer and saw. This year, a select group of students has been involved in an exchange with regard to the Industrial Arts and Home Economics classes.

SEVENTH AND EIGHTH GRADE CROSS COUNTRY TEAMS

The Evanston seventh graders are cross country champions. These boys showed that they had the dedication, enthusiasm, and courage to punish themselves beyond normal expectations to obtain the physical condition needed to become outstanding distance runners.

The eighth grade cross country team did not reach their fullest potential. However, each individual that participated and worked hard during the season will retain endurance and strength that will aid him in future endeavors.

EIGHTH GRADE TRACK TEAM

Track with its variety of events appeals to many students at this age. Although natural ability is important, success is primarily the result of dedication, self-discipline and physical conditioning. This year's eighth grade track team will be favored to repeat their seventh grade championship performance.

BOOKS OF NIGHTMARE, BOOKS OF GLOOM

Four, five, six, seven days since he had borrowed the book. Which book was it? He had forgotten which book, but he knew which type of book. Negative utopias, gospels of pessimism, call them what you may. To him they were demons.

As he shuffled absently toward the living room library, he remembered how it had begun. Who would have thought that one borrowed book would lead to such a grim, almost hypnotic fascination? But none of that mattered to him now. For the moment, his sole purpose in life was to finish 1984.

He entered the room slowly. Around him were: 1984, ANIMAL FARM, BRAVE NEW WORLD; all the famous ones, plus hundreds of lesser works. Suddenly he remembered a couplet:

Books of nightmare, books of gloom
All around my living room.

He had made it up himself to keep his mind off the library, but soon it turned on him and only served to increase his longings.

He took the book off the shelf, knowing that to resist would only make the desire worse. Not like a hungry Jew with pork placed before him, he reflected, but rather like a thirsty man with nothing to drink but salt water. Any drink would only make him thirstier, but not to drink was impossible.

Was there any way out, he asked himself? Yes, there was. He had rejected it before, but now returned to it in desperation. If only he had the courage to act . . .

That night a burglar broke into his house. He was met by the strange sight of a body slumped on the floor, with four empty bottles of sleeping pills around him.

JUSTICE

Through the mire they trudged and crawled. The heat of the day scorched the soldiers. As Jeff limped along, more dead than alive, he thought of how he had been ruthlessly forced into slavery - the slavery of soldiery.

Now the trudging became more laborious and the path more treacherous. Any minute a Viet Cong might attack. As Jeff swatted at a torturous mosquito, it came, the uncanny feeling of a bullet in your side. As Jeff lay dying, thoughts ran through his head. Thoughts as plentiful as the blood oozing out of his body. His recollections centered around his wife and son. How would they survive? Then it was over.

Jeff died without a trial. Thirty thousand other men have died. Thirty thousand more may die. You may be one of them. Think about it.

THE WAVES OF LIFE

No human can stop things from happening in life. No human can control the waves of the future from rolling ashore. In life people must ride these waves or fall into the water and be washed away. The waves to surf on have and will keep rolling ashore just as there will be people to challenge these waves.

TIME

"How time flies by." It is an expression almost everyone has heard, yet few people realize its true meaning. Only at rare times, do we stop and realize how time flies. At thirteen we wonder if we will ever reach the age of twenty, but at eight, we wondered if we would ever be thirteen. On a news report we hear about some unknown Minnesota Senator who is going to challenge the President and we laugh. Three months later he's a leading political figure. To the people who lived in one era, December 7, 1940, still sends a chill down their backs. Yet, to the people who live in this age, it is just a place, a date, a time in history. And you know that however famous you become and whatever goodness you perform, time will eventually cover you up and bury you. With all this in mind, you can set out with your goals to help as many people as possible in your short life, for time will sooner or later catch up with you.

Danny Comer

The rolling hills ask no questions about the lonely road running through its field or about the spacious sky up above looking down at it. It asks no questions about the huge telephone poles alongside the road: it does not care if the trees or grass grow on its ground and it does not ask why the road is deserted. All it wants is peace. Why can't man be the same?

REMINISCENCE OF A WHALER

It wasn't the first time I'd been out. Not my last either, I hoped. Hope. Bah! It's another name for deceit. But often I find that it's my only weapon against despair. Believe me when I say despair, because it's not just despair, it's the oblivion of the "horse latitudes", it's the reality of death during a gale, it's the suppression of a tyrannic captain, and most of all, it's the terror of a raging whale charging at you. But there's no time for despair then. Sometimes I look back and ask, why? And of course there is the same old reason. The same motive for almost everyone in this boat. It is the only way of life. My father before me was a whaler and his father before him, I suppose. I wonder, though, where did it all begin? It comes to me now; to think I'd almost forgotten.

I had become a cabin boy at the age of ten, give or take a few years. Five years later, I had completed two sailing trips, one aboard a double mast and the other on a triple mast. I was no longer a plebian, for now I was a harpooner. It comes to me now, the feeling of that moment. As I recollect, a fatalistic mood pervaded the atmosphere, and after eight months of anticipation, we were ready for anything. Suddenly, a loud shout came from above: "Thar she blows, starboard side!" Each of the words were long and distinct. In an instant the boats were loaded and set into the ocean. The misty air now slapped our faces. As usual, the head boatman's voice filled our ears, now cursing at us, then praising, pleading, singing to put our backs to it and get the cursed whale!

It had gone down below again. These are the most terrifying moments a harpooner faces. The whale waits below, usually for fifteen minutes, but where will it come up? Under you? In front or from behind? Suddenly, there came from the depths a massive bulk of darkness. The harpooners headed towards the monster. As the blood spurted from the beast, we knew it would be our prize or our doom. Down came the immense tail that brought choking, foaming sea water into our lungs, noses, and eyes. The whale would now give the fight of its life, and so would we.

Our two lives were in balance. Our knowledge against its instinct, its fear and its strength. All it had to do now was to submerge and backtrack under us. We all knew that! But somehow the whale's instinct led it away from us and towards the open sea. The once deep green sea was now maroon. What was once life for the whale, had now seemed to betray it in its last hour of need. The fight had ended and we were the victors. The spoils of war were ours!

Our vessel trailed back to us. We were loaded aboard and by the grace of God were safe again. The whale was intact and on the starboard. We now had the long and arduous process of skinning the blubber. It would then be boiled in a kettle down to oil. Though the stench was strong, the memory remains sweet in my mind.

Then a loud shout came from above, "Thar she blows!" And like a sixth sense the boats were all boarded.

UP AND UP

Mr. Up was his name. He had only one ambition to fulfill. This goal was to create a soft drink with a completely new and exciting taste. His first try at this was simple enough. After studying many methods of making soft drinks, he realized all soft drinks had sparkling water and other types of flavoring added. "Why," he thought, "do people have many ingredients in their drinks?" Why is not just one ingredient enough? He put his theory to work by using just sparkling water as a drink. His first attempt was entitled "One-Up." After testing it on several of his friends, he decided it needed something else. After studying soft drinks for two more years, he knew what "One-Up" had lacked. He added this ingredient (which is secret, so I can't relay it to you), and this, too, was not successful. Since it was a failure, he decided to simply call it "Number Two," so his name would not be connected with another failure.

For five more years Mr. Up studied and tried again only to fail. At this point his "mixtures" totalled five. For another year he studied soft drinks in every possible way, and once again he attempted to make an irresistible drink. After mixing, stirring, testing, and adding more, he dared to taste it. He did, and it was AWFUL! "Number Six" was a failure! Well that was it. If an irresistible drink had to be made, someone else would have to make it.

Mr. Up was not a young man and died later that year, leaving everything he owned to his son, Tom. Tom had respected his father greatly and wanted to carry on his father's work. He studied his father's notes, night and day for a week and decided the least thing he could do was try.

For two years Tom Up studied soft drinks all over the world. Now it was his turn to try to make the irresistible soft drink. After mixing the "potion," he tasted it. It was drab. He, too, called his first attempt, and failure, "Number One". After 5 years he had had five mixtures that had all failed. Again for a year he studied, but this time he used his father's notes as a guide. He used some of the ingredients from each of his father's mixtures. After he made it and tasted it, he entitled the concoction "Number Six". It, too, was unsuccessful. But Tom thought, "I will not stop at six as my father did, but try once again."

For another year he studied every possible type of soft drink. One afternoon after a complete day of studying, Tom Up began to prepare drink "Number Seven". After working on it for two hours, he thought it was done. The time came to taste it. As he did, his eyes lit up and a look of complete satisfaction had come over his face. HE HAD DONE IT! HE HAD MADE AN IRRESISTIBLE SOFT DRINK! Traditionally, he named it "Number Seven". "But," he thought, "my dear father and I deserve some credit for the drink. After all, we both spent the prime of our lives working on it." So Tom added his name to number seven and the irresistible soft drink came to be known as "Seven-Up!"

THE ROOM

Feeling old and a trifle sad, he shut out the memories by changing the entire alcove. The cluttered wooden bookcase filled with toys in past days, now contained religious and scholarly books. He remembered the Donald Ducks, Mickey Mouses and other recollections from the sweet past. High school textbooks now sat on the glass-topped desk. Before, the rug had been ruined: now a fluffy maroon replacement filled the emptiness of the bare floor. The solid white walls and ceiling looked oppressive. How he wished everything could be like it was before. All he'd have to do would be to turn back the clock...

THE OLD WOMAN

Her hair is snow white, almost like floss
 Her old heart has suffered so many a loss
 Her eyes slightly sparkle, their bright lights have dimmed
 She sits and remembers, her eyes are tear-rimmed.

Her shape still is trickling like
 sands almost gone
 Her small body's frail, her old face is drawn
 Her skin is so soft, yet wrinkled
 and pale
 She still meets the mailman, but now there's no mail.

Her life is now empty, so hollow
 and dark
 Loneliness has left many a mark
 No one to love, nor to be loved by Nothing to live for, yet not wanting to die.

SIMPLICITY

Man is never satisfied with simplicity.
 He is always looking for more and better things.
 If he has one pencil,
 He wants two pens.
 Why does man enjoy complexity over
 simplicity?
 With complexity man is in a rush.
 With simplicity he may move
 about slowly and peacefully.
 He may enjoy things for what they are,
 Not what he wants them to be.
 With complexity time is a fast train,
 rushing ahead without a pause.
 Simplicity is where time is a river.

THE OTHER SIDE

As she waddled down to the rivershore, she raised her head and sniffed the air. No unusual smell was in the air today. She reached the rivershore and hesitated. Then she put her paw in and tested the water. So far so good. The water almost warm enough. She had to make her decision. Should she cross the river? She had tried frantically many times before. She thought of what was on the other side. Then, without the slightest warning, she jumped in.

The river currents were strong, the water didn't seem as warm now. She pushed and pushed, but no matter how hard she struggled, the water just pushed back. She swam back to the shore and shook herself. She was wet and angry, but she was determined. She walked upstream. In the middle of the stream she saw a rock. She jumped in. This part of the river wasn't as strong. She struggled with all of her might and soon reached the rock. She pulled her wet body up. When she was on top the rock, she sniffed the air around her. There was a definite smell of danger. She looked at the shore she was determined to reach. She sniffed again. The smell was a human smell. She had to make her decision. Should she jump in and struggle on, paying no attention to the danger? Or should she go back to the other shore and shield herself from the danger? But the decision was made for her. A shot rang out.

Days later her body washed ashore. It was the shore she wanted to reach - alive. Man had destroyed her.

THE MEAL

It was winter when I spied him
(I had not a bite to eat.)

He was sitting on a tree branch
Looking like a scrumptious treat.

With beak made of banana,
And body of whipped cream,
And chocolate sauce to top it off
(It must have been a dream!)

I planned to make a meal of him
That barren winter day,
But before I'd even found a spoon
My meal had flown away.

MONDAY

It was Monday. I found myself lying in bed listening to the shiny silver alarm clock blasting its pleasant tunes into my ear. My arm swung slowly and painfully around and slammed down upon the loathsome noise. I screamed as a huge throbbing pain shot through my arm. The clock spun across the room and hit the pale wall. I dragged myself out of bed and picked up my alarm clock, which was slowly sinking into masses of scribbled-upon papers beside the wall. I had been lucky. The papers had cushioned the fall of the alarm clock.

I got dressed and stumbled out into the kitchen. I poured some cereal into a bowl and then poured some milk on the floor. I wiped it up, ate, and began to read the paper. Suddenly, I felt a strange sickening feeling as I glanced uneasily at the clock. With mounting panic I realized it was seven o'clock.

I put on my coat and hat and stepped out into the freezingly cold world. I fell down the stairs and hit an area of cold hard ice. It wasn't hard enough, though, and I fell through. I was engulfed in the freezing water. I glanced at my waterproof, dustproof, shockproof, Swiss-made watch. It had stopped.

As I lay at the bottom of the freezing pool and reflected on the chances of my drowning, I realized something: Monday had just begun!

Now see your efforts wasted
See that chance pass you by.

And past is no more;
When what we adored
Is long since gone

When all things that were
Are no longer here,
Then it is Future.

MY FAVORITE LEADER

My favorite leader is Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Even though he has died, his dreams still linger. He spoke of reaching the top of the mountain and had he not died, this impossible dream might have been possible.

I think our generation should carry out his plans so that the generation which follows us lives in a peaceful world, a world where black and white children live in the same neighborhoods, go to the same schools, and give no regard to color, race or creed.

Martin Luther King was important to today's youth. He made them aware of how many black people suffered because of color. He made them aware of how many oppressed black and white people there were. He made more Americans aware of the fact that all people are equal, that they are brothers and should live peacefully.

The hope to reach his goal still remains in the hearts of many, for he fought for the innocent children of all races.

BEST OF LUCK

Beads of sweat grew on my face as the minutes came closer. Any second now a man would walk out of the door of the stadium and go to the platform where he would fire the gun as a signal to go.

I really should have been proud to represent a school as great as Chute for the race, but at this moment I wasn't, I was just scared! I looked back toward the door, and suddenly, I saw a man walk through it. He walked toward the stand calmly. He could be calm, he didn't have to run in the race. "On the count of five," his words echoed out, "I'll fire the gun. Best of luck to all of you."

The words rang through my mind like the pealing of church bells. Now the man began to count, "One"; I stooped down into a running position; "Two"; I lifted my head to study the field; "Three"; I looked for my partner to whom I would hand the orange stick; "Four"; "Five", I thought to myself, here goes! And then it came, BANG!!

I ran my head off, praying to God that I wouldn't trip or fall accidentally. My partner grew nearer and I swiftly handed the stick to her. We had practiced this many times so I was positive it wouldn't fall. She took it and ran off.

I suppose we both must have run very fast, for a few minutes later we were standing on the highest platform with a gold pendulum around our necks. We had WON!

QUESTIONS ABOUT TIME

What is time? It comes it goes. You don't smell, taste, feel or hear time, but you can sense it. When did time begin? Will it ever end? Does anyone know why time exists or why we live through it? Why can't time disintegrate? What would the world be like without time? Does anyone really have "all the time in the world?"
